EST. 1733

Savannah is the largest registered urban Historic Landmark District in the United States. It encompasses over 1,600 structures restored all within 2.2 square miles. Not only was she the state of Georgia's first city and capital, but America's first planned city utilizing the grid system and public squares.

NOTE: North is on bottom of this map, just as most 18th-century maps were. Why? The importance of the historic waterfront. If not for the port, there'd be no Savannah.

Pedestrian access down to River Street is provided by numerous stairs and ramps located along Bay Street. Access is also provided by a public elevator located behind City Hall.

Broughton Street blends Savannah's Southern charm and easy-going elegance with emerging trends of specialty retailers, chef-driven restaurants and fashion-forward thinkers. The beautiful architecture and historic buildings that line this natural artery provide the perfect backdrop for a memorable experience.

From trendy upscale shopping to antique dealers, Broughton Street is Savannah's Fifth Avenue.
